Document A

It was 1910, then, and the twenty-fifth anniversary of my coming was near at hand. Thoughts of the past filled me with mixed joy and sadness. I was overcome with a desire to celebrate the day. But with whom? Usually this is done by "ship brothers," as East-Siders call fellow immigrants who arrive here on the same boat. It came back to me that I had such a ship
5 brother, and that it was Gitelson. Poor Gitelson! He was still working at his trade. I had not seen him for years, but I had heard of him from time to time, and I knew that he was employed by a ladies' tailor at custom work somewhere in Brooklyn. (The custom-tailoring shop he had once started for himself had proved a failure.) Also, I knew how to reach a brother-in-law of his. The upshot was that I made an appointment with Gitelson for him to be
10 at my office on the great day at 12 o'clock, I did so without specifying the object of the meeting, but I expected that he would know.

Finally the day arrived. It was a few minutes to 12. I was alone in my private office, all in a fidget [...]. My eye swept the expensive furniture of my office. I thought of the way my career had begun. I thought of the Friday evening when I met Gitelson on Grand Street, he
15 an American dandy and I in tatters. The fact that it was upon his advice and with his ten dollars that I had become a cloakmaker stood out as large as life before me. A great feeling of gratitude welled up in me, of gratitude and of pity for my tattered self of those days. Dear, kind Gitelson! Poor fellow! He was still working with his needle. I was seized with a desire to do something for him. I had never paid him those ten dollars. [...]

20 It was twenty minutes after 12 and I was still waiting for the telephone to announce him. My suspense became insupportable. "Is he going to disappoint me, the idiot?" I wondered. Presently the telephone trilled. I seized the receiver.

"Mr. Gitelson wishes to see Mr. Levinsky," came the familiar pipe of my switchboard girl. "He says he has an appointment—"

25 "Let him come in at once," I flashed.

The Great Motivator. Better known as Jack Ballentine. If you've been alive and cognizant for the past twenty years, you've undoubtedly read all about the Jack Ballentine story. How he grew up as a steelworker's son in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, discovered a talent for football in high school, won a full scholarship to Michigan State, became the most
5 renowned college quarterback¹ of the mid-sixties, then led the Dallas Cowboys to three Super Bowl victories during his high-profile professional career. [...]

Everyone expected Ballentine to end up as an archetypal screwed-up jock², someone who, upon retiring from the NFL³, would blow most of his fortune on nose candy, rapacious women, and bad investments. Instead, he surprised the world by moving to New York in 1975
10 and becoming a self-styled real-estate developer. The cynics laughed – and predicted he'd be in bankruptcy court within twelve months. [...]

But Ballentine being Ballentine, he wasn't satisfied with the humdrum role of multimillionaire developer. Rather, he had to transform himself into the Master Builder – Mr. High-rise, who, during the height of the Reaganomics⁴, imprinted his very own stamp on 15 the Manhattan cityscape. Big buildings. Big deals. [...] A man who sold himself to the public as the great entrepreneurial patriot of his time: Capitalism's Great Quarterback. [...]

Then, in 1991, it finally all went wrong. A casino deal in Atlantic City fell apart. A huge high-rise development in Battery Park City spiraled way over budget. Ballentine's corporate cash flow dried up. He was $200 million in debt. His bankers decided that he was 20 no longer worth the gamble. So they pulled the plug. And the Ballentine building empire crashed and burned.

It was a widely publicized downfall. And the public loved it. To many people, there was something satisfying about watching the Waterloo of such towering testament to self-admiration. We may worship success in America, but we are also riveted by failure.

Douglas Kennedy, The Job, 1998

² screwed-up jock (slang): here, someone who fails after his sporting career

³ NFL: National Football League

⁴ the Reaganomics: the economic policy under President Reagan
